

How well is your child really doing in school?

Some people in Washington, D.C. don't want you to know.

Today, you have a way to know. All states administer a single annual test to public school students between third and eighth grade and once again in high school to measure the basics of reading and math.

Simply put, the results from these tests inform parents if a school is preparing their child to flourish . . . or flounder. Results from these tests also help parents choose the right school for their children, and provide the only objective look at how their kids are growing and learning, compared to their peers.

At this very moment, lobbyists and special interests in Washington, D.C. are working hard to take this valuable information away from parents.

These statewide tests don't tell us everything, but they are an important tool for parents, especially now when standards in our schools are changing.

Fight for your child. Lend your voice. Join us. We're the {your organization's name goes here and one sentence on who you are}. Call 800-000-0000 and go to Your URL.org

Fight with us to keep annual education achievement results.

Your organization's logo
goes here.

How well is your child really doing in school?

Some people in Washington, D.C. don't want you to know.

Today, you have a way to know. All states administer a single annual test to public school students between third and eighth grade and once again in high school to measure the basics of reading and math.

Simply put, the results from these tests inform parents if a school is preparing their child to flourish . . . or flounder. Results from these tests also help parents choose the right school for their children, and provide the only objective look at how their kids are growing and learning, compared to their peers.

At this very moment, lobbyists and special interests in Washington, D.C. are working hard to take this valuable information away from parents.

These statewide tests don't tell us everything, but they are an important tool for parents, especially now when standards in our schools are changing.

Fight for your child. Lend your voice. Join us. We're the {your organization's name goes here and one sentence on who you are}. Call 800-000-0000 and go to Your URL.org

Fight with us to keep annual education achievement results.

Your
organization's
logo
goes here.

You have a way to measure your child's performance at school... But for how long?

Today, you have a way to know. All states administer a single annual test to public school students between third and eighth grade and once again in high school to measure the basics of reading and math.

Simply put, the results from these tests inform parents if a school is preparing their child to flourish . . . or flounder. Results from these tests also help parents choose the right school for their children, and provide the only objective look at how their kids are growing and learning, compared to their peers.

At this very moment, lobbyists and special interests in Washington, D.C. are working hard to take this valuable information away from parents.

These statewide tests don't tell us everything, but they are an important tool for parents, especially now when standards in our schools are changing.

Fight for your child. Lend your voice. Join us. We're the {your organization's name goes here and one sentence on who you are}. Call 800-000-0000 and go to Your URL.org

Fight with us to keep annual education achievement results.

Your
organization's
logo
goes here.